AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

The decision of those who contemplate taking a course at the university in agricultural education should now be made. The new step is undoubtedly one of great importance to the community, and it is most desirable that the university should be well supported. The university has passed the bill for the establishment of the new order, and it devolves upon others to give it the support that will make the enterprise of the value it should be to the State. In obtaining the services of such a man as Professor Watt, the authorities have placed the possibilities, providing the students are available, beyond question. The appointment has met with general approval, and as a member of the university, it is most desirable that the university should be well supported. There is no doubt that the right man is in the right place. That opinion was the more valuable, as it came from one who was in the position to appreciate the value of the university, and to thoroughly realise what it meant to have a competent man at the head of it. And it was endorsed by a gathering of men in a similar position. There is a great deal to be attached to the fact that Professor Watt, of the University of Sydney, is the man who is to be in charge of the university. This, of course, is a splendid thing in every way. It clears the track for the new man, and puts him on his mettle. He knows he is in a friendly atmosphere as far as those who might be considered his competitors are concerned; knows that they hold nothing but good will and high expectations; and that impels a man to do all possible to realise those anticipations.

The community has so much to gain from the thorough dissemination of scientific agricultural education that it is most gratifying to feel that matters are in the right hands. Apart from the general good that will come from the outcome of a better grasp of scientific principles in the field, and the uplifting of agriculture generally, we have suffered in the past from lack of instructors and efficient experts. It has been a very real problem. For these men have to be trained, and the community will benefit by their training and future presence. It is in this respect that the new order of things has to be welcomed. But while the community may be very glad that it is only human that those who are to furnish the material, the students at the university in the future, should also see a distinct gain to the community. As we can see, who has the inclination to take up this work, will find in the future plenty of openings for his activities. The very fact that the university is to be a centre of general community will create the work and opportunities for the students when they have finished their education and are ready to give their services.

For the information of those who are interested in this matter it may be pointed out that the course at the university is four years, in addition to a year at the agricultural college, or some approved farm. The idea of practical experience is a very real one, and while it will not be necessary for the year to be served in one consecutive period, still it is preferable in any case that the experience should be gained before entering the university course. The total course will cost about £35 for the university charges, apart from text books, which will not, however, be a heavy expense. The first year begins in March next, and the second and third terms during the year. The lectures begin on March 20, continuing till May 27, next term June 12 to August 13, third term September 25 to November 10, and the fourth term commencing in January 1912. The students will attend every working day to receive lectures and demonstrations in practical work in the laboratory. Any intending student has only to write to, or interview, Professor Watt to obtain any further information that he may desire.

What is urgently required to make this movement a thorough success is the practical interest of some of those who have made their entrance from the land. The endowment of a few scholarships, the award of a few prizes at the university would prove a most valuable means of attracting students, and it is to be hoped that these will be founded. Those who have been in the country for their property could not find a better means of showing their appreciation than by founding a scholarship as indicated.

to be redeemed, the banks being automatically relieved, and can return to give gold for paper; and so the Government will get its concentration of trouble for what it may be worth. But we fail to see that Mr. Fisher has answered Mr. Kidston in any effective way. What is to prevent the banks from presenting great collections of paper at the Treasury in Melbourne? They are now accumulating paper. It will, therefore, be just as bad for the Treasurer to have half a dozen large holders of Federal notes demanding gold at one point as a thousand or ten thousand smaller holders with their paper revolvers at half a dozen centres. The gold will have to be found just the same.

The Premier of Queensland knows that his State note has always been strongly backed by gold held at the Treasury. In the last statement on public works he said that for £1,000,000 of notes issued in Queensland, the Treasury held in 1910 nearly half in gold. That is the secret of stability and popularity. The people who handle notes will not worry while the gold reserves are substantial; and since the issue of 1903 the various banks doing business in Australia have consistently maintained ample liquid assets. Twenty-five per cent. has been considered a sufficiently safe margin in this regard, but many of our banks have held nearer twice that in coin and bullion against their liabilities. The result has been that the public has been able to get its money as readily as gold, and as the Prime Minister may point to the fact that the Federal Treasury is keeping its gold reserves up to 30 per cent., perhaps he will claim that there must always be the same confidence in the new note issue. We do not think there is any immediate danger of a crisis, but it is quite possible that the present emission of three and a half millions will be doubled and trebled, and that the Labour Government will have "money to burn" in the immediate future. But there is always a Nemesis in these things. Mr. Kidston's warning is that the Federal Treasury has power to turn safe practice into sheer gambling. He is under no particular temptation now, but it will not always be sunshine. When the clouds lower the danger will be less a substantial reserve is treasured upon, and lest notes be issued far beyond the public need, it is better to establish a sound precedent and stick to it.

THE DECLARATION OF LONDON.
It is evident that considerable discussion will yet precede the ratification of Great Britain of the proposed new code of naval warfare. Though that code is not yet agreed to by the representatives of all the nations, it is undoubtedly largely the work of the British, and it is not surprising that the British Government is so anxious to see it adopted. The code is not only a code of naval warfare, but it is a code of international law. It is a code that will be of great value to the world, and it is a code that will be of great value to the British Empire. It is a code that will be of great value to the world, and it is a code that will be of great value to the British Empire. It is a code that will be of great value to the world, and it is a code that will be of great value to the British Empire.

ASPECTS OF DEFENCE.
The deputation which waited on the Lord Mayor the other day to urge the importance of defence may have been a little bolstered in its efforts, but its intentions were good. It is true that defence is no part of the official functions of the Lord Mayor, but an excuse for the deputation can be found in the fact that he is more or less a symbol of civil life, and is expected to give the lead to citizens whenever, in their inchoate way, they have something to say, and do not know how to say it. There is no reason why a public meeting should not be held to voice the very proper views expressed by the deputation, and the Minister for Defence would certainly be the last man in the world to resent such a course. Senator Pearce is busily engaged in making his speech, and he has not yet finished. He is talking about so long, namely, putting the defence of Australia on a sound basis. In that task he needs all the sympathy and support that he can get, and it will help him for the citizens to become vocal in their own behalf. It is in fact, it is easy to speak, but it is not so easy to do. It is not so easy to do, but it is not so easy to do. It is not so easy to do, but it is not so easy to do. It is not so easy to do, but it is not so easy to do.

RINGBARKING THE FEDERATION.
Mr. Wade is ready for the fray, and meanwhile the statement of the Premier of Queensland on the referendum is worthy of the attention of every elector in this State. What is given as the point of view for the Northern State, with its progressive works, its successful settlement programme, and its attitude in self-government generally, may be accepted for New South Wales without reservation, because the conditions and prospects are largely the same, and prosperity in both cases is raising identical problems. Apart from that, since we are all citizens of the Commonwealth, the arguments of the Premier of Queensland in his present form are unassailable. After ten years we cannot say that the Federal form of government has been tried to a standstill, and to accept the amendments to the Constitution now proposed by the Federal Ministry is undoubtedly to ringbark the Federation. The Premier of Queensland's term hardly describes the aim of the Labour party in this respect. It is not argued by the latter that government is impossible under a system which was accepted by the people a decade ago; but since the Labour party has wanted other things to suit itself without reference to the Commonwealth as a whole, Unification promises a control of men and means which appeals to the leaders, and gives them hope for unionism beyond their wildest dreams. Therefore, unification must be achieved by hook or by crook, and it is not surprising that the Premier of Queensland is so anxious to see it adopted. The code is not only a code of naval warfare, but it is a code of international law. It is a code that will be of great value to the world, and it is a code that will be of great value to the British Empire. It is a code that will be of great value to the world, and it is a code that will be of great value to the British Empire.
